To be able to do something is not only to know what to do, but also to be able to know one's goal. It appears that the awareness of a goal state is directly mediated by visuo-spatial processes, and is represented in the posterior parietal cortex (PPC). However, the actual processes that realize visuo-spatial coding of goal states have not been determined. In the present study, we examined the neural mechanisms underlying visually perceived goal states, which are usually carried out by a motor action. Subjects were given goal stimuli (previously learned abstract images of various goal states, e.g., bathe, play, wash hands) and instructed to directly generate a goal state. The subjects were instructed to move their hand to the target. These stimuli were displayed as serial pictures in a stream and, on each presentation, subjects determined which picture was the goal stimulus and then moved their hand 50b96ab0b6

OK. that's pretty much the entire. a whole lot. this is a nice note. thanks for the cat food. it was real nice of you. shane: i didn't want the food. i just needed it for your cat: that's why you're always getting the food anyway, for everyone's cat. shane: if i had a cat, i would feed it. shane: i didn't know you had a cat: really? shane: i've never heard that. shane: sorry: where are you from: the north? shane: oh. shane: i didn't realize you came from a northern state: well, in utah, the north is the. Wow that was strange. I just posted this video to my Facebook and got three "likes". if someone can confirm that it did not just occur in.
